Action Center holds Green Drinks in Bloomington-Normal on the first Tuesday of every month.

The March Green Drinks will take place Tuesday, March 4, 2014 at 5:30 p.m. at Medici in Normal and feature a presentation by the Todd Abecrombie of EverGreen Home Energy Consultants on making our homes more energy efficient.

Reducing the energy usage of homes is a critical piece of reducing air pollution, use of natural resources, and our impact on climate change. What can we do to make a home energy efficient? What features should we consider? Which ones are most important? How can we address indoor air quality issues at the same time?

Todd Abercrombie works as an energy consultant in Peoria and answers these types of questions every day. He is president of EverGreen Home Energy Consultants and works with homeowners, business owners, contractors, and builders to provide diagnostics energy audits to verify the energy performance of homes. He is a certified professional from the Building Performance Institute (www.bpi.org) and credentialed by the US Green Building Council as a LEED Green Associate.

The public is invited to attend Green Drinks, taking place in the small private room of Medici to the left of the front entrance. For more information on Green Drinks, contact Michael Brown at the Ecology Action Center at (309) 454-3169 x.11 or mbrown@ecologyactioncenter.org.

Garden Tips

by Helen Leake - McLean County Master Gardener

After a long, cold couple of months, it is good to see the longer daylight hours. Not only do we human people enjoy it, so do the plants. During the winter, most of the house plants take time to rest. Around the middle of February, we could start to see some new growth in our house plants. Then it is time to start fertilizing them again. Now is the time to rejuvenate your plants. When you pinch back or cut back to the node (where the leaf meets the trunk), that will encourage branching and the plant will have a more tidy appearance. You can use the clippings to start a new plant.

For geraniums and most other plants, take a cutting from the top growing point of the plant. The cutting should be 4 - 6 inches long. Cut it at a 45-degree angle using a clean sharp knife. Wipe the blade with rubbing alcohol to sterilize it before cutting. Strip the leaves from the lower half of each cutting, leaving 2-4 sets of leaves. Also remove any flower or seed pod from the tip. Work quickly so the cutting won't wilt. Some people like to dip the base of the cutting into a rooting powder, however it can develop without it. Have your container of moistened potting mix ready. Use a pencil to make a hole for each cutting. Set the bottom 1/3 - 1/2 of the stem in the hole and firm the soil around it. Cover the container with a clear plastic bag to form a tent, making sure the plastic does not touch the plant. Place it in a warm indirect sun spot. It should start to form roots in 2 - 3 weeks.

Many times we have heard that someone really likes a certain kind of apple, but they don't know what variety they are, so they plant a seed. A tree can grow, but the apples might not taste the same. The only way to be sure to get the same apple is to take a stem from their favorite apple tree and graft it to the root stock of another tree.

Grafting has expanded to other fruits, nuts and vegetables. We have seen grafted tomatoes for a couple of years. They are more expensive than a single tomato plant because the grafting has to be done by hand, but anyone can do it.

You need a plant with vigorous root growth and good disease resistance and it will be called root stock. Also choose a tomato with good flavor and color which would be called scion. [SIGH on] Using a clean, sharp razor blade, cut the top of the rootstock off at a 60-degree angle. Pot that plant in a 4 inch pot. Center the splice in a grafting clip. Cut the scion at a 60-degree angle and slip it in place so the cuts fit snugly. Close the clip to hold the cuts together. Water and place it in a dark spot. Mist the plant daily so the scion does not wilt. After 3 - 4 days, you should see a callous forming and you can move it to a brighter spot. When new leaves start to grow, you can plant it in the ground, keeping the graft an inch or 2 above the ground. Also tie the stem to a stake so roots won't form on the scion. When tomato plants get too tall before we can plant them, we say to lay them on their side so more roots can form on the stem. Be careful the new roots do not grow on the scion, that will reduce the vigor and fruit production. You might need to stake the plant. Grafted tomatoes have been used in Asia and Europe for years, because people have limited space and they cannot rotate plants. With grafted plants you have higher yields, stronger growth, larger fruit and longer harvest season. You can also find grafted peppers and eggplants.
